“ I ran into Linda by accident at the hospital back in late February. I was passing by her room on the way to the cafeteria. At first, I wasn't sure it was her b/c I hadn't seen her in a long time. Anyway, I sat and talked with her about anything, everything, and nothing all at the same time. She was a little saddened by realizing that she was "the last of the girls", but her spirits picked up when she was able to place a call to her brother Pete. The conversation seemed disjointed to me but apparently they knew what they were talking about because she hung up content and in better spirits. The last thing Linda did was to ask me to bring her some glasses from the Dollar Tree. She threw out some letters, but she could not tell me the strength of the glasses. I could not find what she was talking about at any of the Dollar Trees. Til this day I don't know if she wasn't talking right or I wasn't listening right. What I do know is:. I am glad that never ending construction at AdMed had me walking a maze that led to a good conversation with Linda. "Mudbone", "Shamara", and "Ant", your momma loved and still loves y'all. She talked about getting out that hospital to see y'all and be with y'all. She talked about y'all like you was the best thing since sliced bread. I know that talk and I know she meant every word of it no matter what anyone else might say. May you all find comfort in knowing that your mom is no longer burdened by illness, pain, or the worries of this world. You and your families are in my prayers. I love y'all.
